THE RIGHT OF ASSOCIATION.

Mr Editor-One would suppose, from the recent remarks of the Boston Advocate and other papers, that the of a dove had troubled the mid-air of fashion's resort, right of associating in trade was a mere nullity, and that the error of our Legislature had been in endeavoring to secure the practical enjoyment of this right by law and thereby aid its exercise. Now it appears to us that this right is undeniable-one which it is of the utmost importance to versation which she heard not eight-and-forty hours protect by legal provisions. The system of protecting the right of associating for the purpose of supplying "I shall have the money, shall I? Dear, dear, the wants of society by means of commercial exchanges is, we have supposed, "the system" of which Mr Henshaw expresses his approbation in his recent manly "You are to gratify me by not keeping your prom- and very able Address. All the provisions of law framed with the view of carrying this system into effect, we cannot approve. To correct these will be to correct the abuses

The great abuse of the system, it appears to us is, that FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION is not secured by the present "Now, Louisa-this is my one condition. rently, compel every man to stand alone, and prohibit him to associate his means with those of others, on the ground that legislators have often secured to particular associated individuals exclusively, certain privileges to which they had no exclusive right. Pray, should the legislature prohibit associations being formed for the purpose of trading with the East Indies, merely because the Portuguese, Dutch, French, and English governments have secured by law to particular men the exclusive privilege of reaping the profits of that trade ? No. We can understand why exclusive privileges should be denied to men or associations of men, but not why citizens should be denied the right of associating their means, under standing laws, to such an extent and within such limits as shall not endanger the welfare and independence of the state. No association should be for a moment tolerated, which can make the state or government dependent on its will and power, because then it will become leagued with the governmental agents of the people and will force its own will and policy upon the people, so as to create an aristocracy. Such associations, claiming and securing exclusive privileges of great moment in special charters, have ruled modern states and have moulded their policy in all matters which touched their selfish interests. The Bank of the U. S. has attempted to dictate how the currency shall be regulated, has claimed absolute powers to regulate it according to the will of its President and Board of Directors, has thwarted the public agents in their endeavours to enlarge the metallic basis of our currency, has in fine been opposing the people and trying to substitute its own policy for that of the duly chosen representatives of the people, even in the matter of the place of deposite for the public

The reason which we should give why the exclusive privileges of pursuing a trade should be witheld from individual grantees, is, that the profit to be derived from the pursuit of any trade, whether it be farming, importing, manufacturing, banking, or any thing else, is not the exclusive right, or in other words the PRIVATE PROPERTY of any man or body of men; but belongs equally to all who choose to compete for it under the same legal protection. To give to some the exclusive privilege of pursuing a trade, or to clothe any association with such extraordinary powers as to enable them to monopolize a trade and its profits, is a violation of the rights of property. For it makes that the exclusive private property of a few for which all have an equal right to compete on equal terms. Justice and sound policy demand, not that men should be denied the right of association, but that trade should be free: that the law should give no body of men that to which they have no title as their private property, much less that which belongs equally to all. No man or body of men has any exclusive right to the profits of the East India Trade. All have an equal right to compete for its profits. "Down with Banking," cries one. Why not cry out " Down with trade to the East Indies"? " Down with Banking companies. They are associations of wealth and of aristocratic tendency," says one man .-But may not another with equal justice demand of us to put down all partnerships in trade, because they are associations of wealth. We would say secure the right of association, but do so by standing laws and let these general laws be amended whenever the public welfare requires

With these views, we cannot undersand why any de ocrat should ask our government to destroy associations formed for purposes of trade. We claim the right of associating with others for these purposes. To make war upon associations, as such, is no way to aid the people.-For association is the great engine of the people for breaking down the undue power of the wealthy and influential in all affairs, monied and political; for diffusing the benefits of trade and social intercourse among all the members of society. Withhold privileges and secure competition. Arm man for man, and not disband the militia, when a military despot marches with hireling troops to oppress

To prohibit any more associations of wealth, which we understand to be the doctrine of the Advocate, is to make those already formed the more formidable-to drive all, who reap benefit from associating, into one political party, holding out for the exclusive privilege of being associated, and denying the exercise of this common right to others. In this State, where so many associations have been formed and strengthened by heavy investments of capital, such a course cannot be attended with success. To break down the exclusiveness of the privilege of associating, is, we think, a necessary step : and the best way of effecting this object is to make the exercise of the right under discussion universal, by the passage of a general and standing law. To frame a GENERAL LAW of incorporation-that is to say, to extend the provisions of the limited partnership act, so as to put limited partnerships on a strict equality with the present corporations, and to include banking and insurance among the trades which they shall be allowed to pursue, (for these are now expressly excluded !) is, in our view, the great desideratum.

Such is the division of public sentiment on these subjects, that unless a majority of the people in this State can be induced to approve and adopt this mode of making laws for the protection of the right of associating in trade, individuals who are anxious to secure it to themselves will undoubtedly make special application to the legislature for special charters. In this case there will be the same room for abuse as ever; one set of men will have their petitions granted, and another will not be listened to. The legislature will, as heretofore, dicide, not what provisions are necessary for the public good, but who has a right to add so many dollars, in such a town, to the capital embarked in such a business; and who may take his labor for his pains. One legislator will vote for this man because he is a political friend or a neighbor, and another will vote against all, because he is against associations of wealth. Favoritism will thus hold the balance of power-and con petition, instead of being opened, will be closed to all bet

Indiana, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas.—These States have all been claimed by the Whigs of the Nova Scotia order, as confidently as they claimed Illinois and Missouri. Louisiana, we know, has returned a decided majority of Democrats to the Legislature-and we confess the result was not anticipated by us. That State is certain, and Alabama and Arkansas are equally so. Indiana, though her Legislature is opposition, as it always has been, is sound to the core, and we are assued by friends who have never deceived us, that the majority for the Van Buren and Johnson ticket will not be less than ten or twelve thousand. It is thus plain that Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Alabama certainly adhere to the Democracy of the country; and, as for Mississippi, the federal leaders give her up-they do not pretend to claim her. Here are seven of the ten Western States, up-to-thehub for Van Buren and Johnson. Our majorities in them are quite as large as experienced politicians would deem desirable. Dr. Parker, a missionary of the American Board, was about to remove a cataract from one of the eyes of his Ex. Pangneen, the Hoppo of Canton. Grave-robbing, it appears, has become alarmingly prevalent in some parts of China. Not that species of grave robbing known among ourselves, but a plundering of the ornaments attached to the corpse and coffin. It is the custom of the Chinese to place in the graves of their deceased relatives various articles of value, such as gold, silver, pearls, and utensils made of precious stones. The villages of Lungkeang and Lungshan being very wealthy, their place of interment was pitched upon by the grave-robbers as a promising field for plunder. A lady who was in the habit of visiting her husband's grave to worship at and sweep it, first discovered the robbery, and on investigation it was found that more than 80 graves had been opened and rotbed. Ten or 12 of the robbers had been arrested, and would suffer a lingering death by being surely cut

Fire at Port au Platt .- We mentioned on Thursday, on the authority of Capt. Coffin, of the brig America, that a large portion of Port au Platt had been destroyed by fire. Further accounts confirm the report, and estimate the property at two hundred thousand dollars. The property destroyed consisted chiefly of produce owned in Port au Platt and Cape Haytien. "The fire originated in that quarter of the city where the merchants are located, and consequently not one escaped without loss. A large quantity of tobacco was consumed.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Liberation of the colored child Mary, claimed as the slave of Samuel Slater, of the firm of Slater & Aves, immediately became free by the necessary operation of the long established and universally admitted law of Massachusetts. His Honor also directed the clerk to make an order for her discharge from the custody of Mr Aves, and time the Court would consider upon the subject of appointing a legal and permanent guardian, till she attains matuat a future day, a more detailed opinion upon the whole found in their trunks, they were committed to prison, subject would be drawn up.

In the course of his general opinion, the Chief Justice briefly adverted to some of the points made in the arguments. It having been argued for the petitioner, that slavery was contrary to the law of nations, His Honor said-It is too late now to say that slavery is contrary to the law laws of nearly all modern nations, to a greater or less de- just as it was on the poise; -at that moment the compacts; but, on the other hand, slavery does not exist in consequence of any general law of nations-it is merely located. The clause respecting fugitive ing by her shawl to the door of the scuttle. slaves may be considered in the nature of a treaty, because if the Union had not been entered into, it is manifest that treaties for the delivery of such slaves should exist between communities, whose territories adjoined each other, whereby opportunities of escape were continually presented .-His Honor put the case of two adjoining nations of different national character-the one a military nation, and the other an agricultural or commercial nation. In the warlike nation, there may be supposed to exist a law of conscription, compelling every man arrived at a certain age to script may be supposed to abscond into the adjoining nation, where no such law is in force. It is obvious that this oats, hay, and a number of harnesses were burnt. state of things would be regarded by the warlike nation with great dissatisfaction, and continual disputes and hosconscripts; and such a treaty would of course be formed, under mental alienation. because continual wars would be a greater evil to both communities, than the existence of the conscript laws in and Liverpool, is under contract to be finished by the 1st one; but such a treaty, being contrary to the general of November. principles of the laws of the agricultural nation, must be construed strictly. This was the case with the Constitution-the provision respecting fugitives, being contrary to the general principle of our laws, universally established before the adoption of the Constitution, -it must be construed strictly, and is not to be extended by construction to meet the comity of nations. It must receive that strict construction, because it is contrary to our laws, and to natural right. VEGETABLE RHEUMATIC PILLS,-Rheumatism in all its varieties, is one of those disorders which requires the most particular attention. It is a very common complaint throughout the country, and ought to attract the at-tertion of the medical faculty. It is a complaint for which there have been many remedies invented.
